Welcome to
Zion Assembly Church of God Church
We are so glad that you are here with us today!

When I was a little boy, I always got excited when family would come visit. Somebody would pull up in the driveway from another town or another state, and before long they'd be talking and laughing in the kitchen while us young'uns ran in and out of the house wide open. But somewhere before they left, that feeling would hit me. I wanted to go home with them. It didn't matter if it was an aunt, an uncle, or cousins I barely knew. Their stories sounded exciting. Their home seemed mysterious. The thought of the ride there felt like an adventure waiting to happen. And with all the confidence a little boy could muster, I'd look up and say, "Can I go home with y'all?"

Now my mama knew me better than I knew myself. She understood something that I didn't yet understand. She knew that excitement has a way of fading after the sun goes down. She knew that strange bedrooms feel different at midnight. She knew that adventures can suddenly turn into loneliness when a little boy begins missing familiar voices, familiar smells, and the comfort of home.

And truth be told, she was usually right. Many times a child after finally getting there, the excitement wears off. Everything gets quiet. Your stomach would hurt a little. The tears would start forming in the eyes. Before long a child would whisper those words every homesick child has spoken at one time or another: "I want to go home."

But going back home wasn't always easy. The trip might be too far. The roads too long. The hour too late. And the parents probably wasn't about to make that drive just because they had changed their mind.

Sometimes we don't fully appreciate home until we've been away from it awhile. The older I get, the more I think about that. This world has moments of beauty. God has given us blessings, family, memories, and reasons to smile. But if we're honest, there are also moments when something deep inside us becomes homesick.

We watch the world grow colder. We bury people we love. Our bodies grow tired. The years move faster than we ever imagined. And somewhere down deep in the soul of every child of God comes a quiet longing that says: "There's got to be something more than this."

The Bible says in Hebrews 13:14, "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." This world is not our final home. (Continued on next page)

The Bible says in Hebrews 13:14, "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." This world is not our final home.

One day, every believer will take a journey far greater than a childhood trip to a relative's house. We will leave this world behind and step into a place so wonderful that human words cannot fully describe it. A land with no sickness, no funerals, no heartbreak, no fear, and no night. And unlike those childhood trips, there will be no regret when we arrive. No homesickness. No tears asking to come back.

Because when we finally see Jesus face to face, we will realize we are home at last. Sometimes now, after long days and hard seasons, I can almost feel that childlike longing rise up in my heart again. And with simple faith, I find myself saying: "Lord… when the time comes… I want to go home with You.
